Personality Disorder Awareness Network. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Steve Howard (illustrator). Paperback. 46 pages. Dimensions: 8.7in. x 5.8in. x 0.3in. Written by the parent of a child named Justin with ADHD, this children's book about one family's experience helps kids, their parents, teachers and others understand why they can't sit still, talk too much, have difficulty following directions and paying attention. The book includes Parents Corner, a resource section with recommendations for other books on ADHD and organizations who focus on ADHD. Attention Deficit Hyperactive Disorder (ADHD) is not an easy road to travel. It is a mental health condition that affects about 1 in 10 children ages 5 to 17. There are different levels of severity of this disorder, and unfortunately there is often a gap between having the condition and being diagnosed with it. Studies show boys are nearly three times more likely to be diagnosed than girls. In recent years, acceptance of ADHD diagnostics has become easier. Yet it remains a controversial topic in many families, especially in minority communities. Cultural factors play a role in ADHD acceptance. Sometimes the discussion turns into pointing fingers at parents for not applying the right level of discipline or structure for the child - like in this story for Justin's dad - and it ignores the intrinsic needs of the child. About the story: As a single parent living in Bloomingdale, Earnest Williams Jr. set boundaries and cultivated a home environment that taught Justin right from wrong. With a strong moral and spiritual foundation for Justin, Mr. Williams knew he was doing the best parenting he could. Often Justin's behavior would make his father stop and scratch his head in wonderment. I chalked it up to Justin being an only child with a vivid imagination, Mr. Williams said. Neither Justin or...
